

Secure strategy equilibrium in Hotelling's spatial competition model

In the model of price competition with a horizontally differentiated good, the Nash equilibrium does not always exist. We propose a new solution concept, the secure strategy equilibrium, and prove that such a solution always exists for that problem. It is shown that the prices can increase if the firms shift from monopoly to duopoly.